TURGOT, the confessor of Saint Margaret, relates, that immediately after her marriage with Malcolm III., the Queen, in that place where the nuptials were celebrated, as a lasting memorial of her name and her piety, founded a church, which she dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and enriched with numerous ornaments, vessels of solid gold, and an inestimable crucifix, formed of gold, silver and precious stones.¹

This passage, of the best authority, seems partly to countenance the narrative of Boece, who, after detailing the storm which drove the fleet with the Saxon Princes into the Firth of Forth, and their sheltering in the road still called Saint Margaret's Hope,² gives his usual romantic colouring to the incident. Malcolm, who then resided at Dunfermlin, sent envoys to enquire of what lineage and country the strangers were.—

Sed vos qui tandem, quibus aut venistis ab oris, Quove tenetis iter?

And having learned that they were of the line of the Confessor, his benefactor, received them with courtly honour, and in a few days proposed marriage to the sister of the Saxon prince.

This auspicious marriage took place certainly not later than the year 1070 :³

² Wyntoun gives the account of the Saxon princes being driven by stress of weather into the Firth:—

“ Quhen this Edgar Ethlyng,
That of laweh suld have bene kyng,
The kynryk saw dystrowblyd swa,
Of counsale wyt hys systrya twa,
A schype he gat and tuk the se.
For to pas agayne thowcht he
And arrye in the Empyre,
Quhare- of than lord wes his gud-syr.
And as that ware on se sayland,
The wynd swa skant wes than blawand,

And all the weddryns in thaire fayre
Wes to thare purpose all contrayre,
That of fors, as wynd thame moyyd,
Come in the fyrth than thame behowyd,
And in Saynt Margretis Hope he lyve
Of propyre nedie than till arryve.
On this manere Saynt Margret

In-til the kynryk apon thret
Com of hapnyng in Scotland,
Quhen Maleolme in it wes kyng ryngnand.”

Fordun also states, that the place where the Saxon princes landed was called Sinus S. Margarete: and follows Turgot in placing the nuptials at Dumfermlin. v. 16, 17.

³ The chronicle of Melros, in an old interpolation, gives the date of the marriage of Malcolm and Mar-and if it was celebrated at Dunfermlin, we must suppose that at that early period it was already a Royal residence.¹ It probably continued to be so during the reign of Malcolm, for otherwise the Queen's confessor and constant attendant could not have had the personal custody of the treasures of the new church.

The situation of Dunfermlin, within an easy distance of the principal strengths of Scotland, and protected from Southern invasion by the Scotwater, is likely enough to have marked it out as a suitable residence of the Court; and the local tradition which connects a very ancient tower in the grounds of Pittenerieff, with the name of Malcolm Canmore, may perhaps point to the rude dwelling of Royalty before the new convent, with the pleasant site which marks all the houses of the Benedictines, and the comparative luxury which churchmen first knew to throw around their dwellings, allured the Sovereign to become an inmate of the cloister.

Dunfermlin continued for many generations peculiarly a Royal House. Its early benefactors were all Kings; and in imitation of its saintly founder, the succeeding Princes of the Royal Family of Scotland for the most part chose it as their place of burial.

Who were the first occupants of the Abbey, we do not find. It has been generally stated that the house was only a Priory until the time of David,—an opinion which seems to have no other foundation than the occurrence of a Peter, Prior of Dunfermlin, among the ambassadors to England in 1120.¹ It cannot now be necessary, even in Scotland, to remark, that the existence of a Prior does not preclude the existence of an Abbot. David I. appears to have remodelled the original foundation, and to have placed in it an Abbot and twelve monks from Canterbury.² The Church, as completed or restored by him, was dedicated in 1150.³

David's first Abbot was Geoffrey, formerly Prior of Canterbury, exir religionis eximie. He was ordained by Bishop Robert of Saint Andrews in 1128,⁴ died in 1154, and was succeeded by his nephew of the same name.⁵

Galfridus the second died in 1178.⁶

Archibald, or Erkenwald, was the next Abbot. It would appear that the use of the initial letter only of his name in instruments, has produced the mistake of giving Alanus as the name of the Abbot in his time.⁷ Archibald died in 1198.⁸

Robert de Berewick was his successor,⁹ who was deposed, probably for irregularities, by the Cardinal Legate John de Salerno. A.D. 1202.¹⁰

Patrick, sub-prior of Durham, was chosen to succeed him.¹¹ He is a witness in transactions along with William de Malvoisin, Bishop of St. Andrews,¹² and it must have been during his incumbency that that lordly prelate is said to have levied on the Abbey the mulet of no less than two churches, for supplying wine too scantily in the Bishop's chamber, when visiting Dunfermlin.¹³

We hear of no other Abbot till William; and all we have recorded of him is his death in 1238.¹⁴

“ Galfridus prior ejusdem donus successit,”¹⁵ but held the office only two years. He died in 1240.¹⁶

His successor was Robert, a monk of the convent, of the local surname of Keldlechit,—probably the same name which, after passing through many phases, has

and because “non sit currendum in talibus.” (283.) And from two bulls of October 1249, (N. 290, 291) we gather, that His Holiness had been at length satisfied, and had allowed to Margaret the honour of canonization; and indulgences to the faithful visiting her shrine on the day of her festival.

Abbot Robert became Chancellor of the kingdom, and had influence enough to obtain from the Pope, for him and his successors, the privilege of exercising within their Abbey the functions, and using the insignia of Bishops. From this time Dunfermlin became a mitred Abbacy.² Being mixed up with the obscure plot of Alan of Durward, in the early part of the reign of Alexander III., Robert relinquished both his office of state and his Abbacy in 1252, and retired as a simple monk into the Abbey of Newbottle, from whence he again emerged to become Abbot of Melros in 1269 ; which office he held for three years till his death.³

John, prior of the Convent, vir mirae mansuetudinis, was made Abbot in 1252, on the resignation of Robert.⁴ It appears that Dunfermlin, with other religious houses of Scotland, was subjected to a Papal interdict for default of sums it had undertaken to pay for promoting the confirmation of Gamelin the new Bishop of St. Andrews. In 1256, Abbot John set out for Rome to negotiate the release of his House, but died on the road at Pontigny.⁵

Matthew, the cellarar, was the next Abbot,⁶ who was dead before 1270 : for in that year we find

land, for the recovery of the King's Earldom of Huntingdon.¹ He was deposed in 1275, by the Legate Baiamund, and must have deserved his sentence, since Fordun, who was no admirer of Cardinals or Legates, says he was punished “ob innatam animi pertinaciam et intolerabilem operum proterviam.”²

Ralph de Grenlaw, the sub-prior, “vir mansuetus ac prouidus, ac in monastica disciplina satis exercitatus,” succeeded in the Abbacy. He is found in transactions recorded in the Register, in 1280 and 1284; and in 1291 he did homage to Edward in person at Dunfermlin, and again at Berwick in 1296.³

Hugh is said to have been Abbot of Dunfermlin in the 7th year of Robert I.⁴

Robert de Crail was Abbot in 1316, when Duncan Earl of Fife did homage to him for the lands of Cluny, held of the Abbey in capite.⁵

Alexander Ber became Abbot in 1331. He held the office for twenty-two years, and having made a journey to Rome to solicit a grant of a general indulgence, he and his whole company died (apparently of the plague) in Lombardy on his way home in 1353.

The Convent elected⁶ in his room John Blak, their cellarar. But John of Stramiglaw, a young monk of the Abbey, then studying at Paris, hurried to Avignon, and obtained a Papal presentation to the Abbacy, which Blak did not think proper to resist, but accepted from his rival first a pension and afterwards the Priory of Urchard in Moray, a cell of the Abbey.⁷—Here, unluckily, we lose our faithful chronicler, old John of Fordun. The measured terms in which he speaks of the juggle by which John of Stramiglaw obtained the Abbacy, leave the impression that he was still in office while the historian was writing, and therefore not to be lightly spoken of.⁸

⁸ The story is curious:—“Eodem tempore monachus quidam ejusdem monasterii Johannes de Stramiglaw nomine, studens Parisius, timensque dispendium imminentem monasterio suo propter reservationem generalem factum per Summum Pontificem de omnimodis dignitatibus eorum qui decesserunt in hujusmodi peregrinatione: ne ista dignitas devolvetur in manus cuiusdam extranei, curiam Avignonensem adiit et impetravit abbaciām de Dunfermelyn per bullas Apostolicas. His vero auditis, dictus dominus Johannes Blak, consulpsit per seculares et dominos temporales ne cederet dignitati sue abbaciali aut ipsi Apostolico quoquo-

modo, dissimulavit: sed cognitis reservatione Apostolica et collatione facta per bullas sibi Papales, dum ipse Apostolicus cemeterium monasterii cum paucis intravit, abbas prefatus, de consilio fratrum suorum, pro conservatione indemnitas monasterii, ecclesiasticis ornatus indumentis et mitratus, procedens ei ob viam, conventu processionaliter subsequente, ipsam mitram capiti Apostolici et baculum pastoralem manu ejus imposuit, cum Te Deum Laudamus canora voce ad chorum et altare perduxit, et facta oratione, eum installari non minus humiliter quam hilariter effecit; obedientiam manualem flexis genibus, prius prestitit, alias consimiliter subsecutis. Cui vice versa Apostolicus se gratum exhibebat, sibi de honesta pensione providendo: qui postea in Priorem de Urchard est electus.” Qui quidem Johannes de Stramiglaw pro taxatione sui monasterii facta in curia, solvit cameræ Apostolice 50 marcas sterlingorum.

John de Torry is the next Abbot whose name we find mentioned. He held the office on the 4th December 1404,¹ and we find him increasing the allowances of his monks, on the statement of increased dearness of clothing, on the 13th June 1409.²

William de Saneto Andrea was Abbot of Dunfermlin in 1414 and 1419,³ of whom nothing is known but his name.

On the last day of July 1437,⁴ we find Andrew Abbot, who appears in many transactions till the month of January 1441.⁵

On the 16th day of December 1446, Richard de Bothuel appears as Abbot of Dunfermlin,⁶ and he figures in numerous transactions of the Abbey after that date, the latest of which recorded is of the 4th of May 1468.⁷ He was dead before the 4th November 1472.⁸

It is to the occasion of the vacancy by his death, we owe a notable passage of Bishop Leslye on the abuses of Court patronage :

" The Abbaeye of Dunfermeling vacand, the Convent eleisit ane of thair awn monkis, callit Alexander Thomsoun ; and the King promovit Henry Creychtoun, Abbot of Paislay, thairto, quha wes preferrit be the Paip, through the Kingis supplicationis, to the saide abbaeye. And sie lik Mr. Robert Schaw, persoun of Mynto, was promovit be the King of the Abbacye of Paisley. And sua than first began sic maner of promotione of secularis to abbacies be the Kingis supplicationis ; and the godlie erectionis war frustrate and dekayde, becaus that the Court of Rome admittit the princis supplicationis, the rather that thay gat greyt proffeit and sowmes of money thairby ; quhairfore the bischoppis durst not conferme thame that wes chosen be the Convent ; nor thay quha wer electit durst not persew thair awn ryght. And sua the Abbays cam to secular abussis, the Abbots and Pryouris being promovit furth of the Court, quha levit courtlyk, secularlye, and voluptuouslye. And than ceissit all religious and godlye myndis and deidis ; quhairwith the secularis and temporall men beand sklanderit with thair evill example, fell fra all devocioun and godlynes to the warkis of wickednes, quhairof daylie mekil evill did increase."⁹

divitiae qua[rum] ad pauperum miserias levandas seposita fuerant, postea ad divitium explendidas voluptates evocabantur. Non jam Abbates qui pietate prestabant sunt electi a monachis, sed qui gratia valebant selecti a Regibus. Scot. ad an. 1474.*

Henry Creichtoun, the King's Abbot, held the office till after 6th May 1482.

Adam was Abbot from 1483, till 29th June 1490.¹

George is said to have been Abbot in 1496,² and was Abbot, 4th February 1499.³

Robert Blaeader is said to have been Abbot of Dunfermlin, and to have died in his journey to Syria in 1500.⁴

James Stuart, second son of King James III., Duke of Ross and Archbishop of St. Andrews, held the Abbey of Dunfermlin in commendam from 1502 till his death in 1504.

His successor in the Abbey was James Beton, then Provost of Bothwell, afterwards Bishop, Archbishop and Primate, who held it until promoted to the Bishopric of Galloway in 1508, or perhaps till the return from Italy, in 1510, of his destined successor.

This was Alexander Stuart, natural son of King James IV., Archbishop of St. Andrews, and Legate a latere, a prince whom Erasmus, not in mere flattery, characterised as worthy to spring of a king, and of such a king as his father.⁵ He held the Abbey in commendam till his death at the field of Flodden, 1513.

The Abbey, with other great benefices, was now a subject of fierce contention between the family of Hepburn and Andrew Forman, Archbishop Legate,—a dispute which ranked all the nobility of Scotland with one or other of the parties. James Hepburn assumed the title of Abbot in 1515,⁶ as chosen by the Convent. The Legate held a prior grant from the Pope. The law was not quite clear; but, at any rate, it was not heard in such cases, in the regency of Albany. The Regent endeavoured to appease the factions by a compromise, in 1517; and the Abbey of Dunfermlin fell to the share of the Archbishop, while James Hepburn had the Bishopric of Moray. Andrew Forman was buried in the Abbey Church in 1522.⁷

James Beton, Archbishop of Glasgow, who succeeded Forman in the Primacy, was his successor also in the Abbey of Dunfermlin, which he held a second time in commendam, and afterwards styled himself usufructarius, or administrator fructuum, while he allowed the name and probably devolved the duties of Abbot on George Dury.

George Dury, Archdeacon of St. Andrews, styled himself Abbot of Dunfermlin in 1530,⁸ and he continued to take the title of Abbot or Commendator, apparently subordinate to the Archbishop, during the life of the latter. After the Primate's death, in 1539, he acted as Abbot or commendator. The latest deeds of the Ancient Register are granted by him, and in two of the volumes of feu-charters, he is the granter down to the year 1560, when he went to France ; and it is uncertain if he ever returned.¹

Robert Pitcairne, of the opposite party, apparently by some friendly arrangement, succeeded Dury in his Abbacy, as well as in the office of Archdeacon of St. Andrews. He joined the party of the Regent Moray, became Secretary, and was much trusted and employed in many of the negotiations of that distracted period. In 1583, he was denounced rebel for his share in the raid of Ruthven,² and in 1585. Patrick, Master of Gray, had a Crown grant of the Abbacy,³ which, on his disgrace in 1587, was granted to George Earl of Huntlie.⁴

In 1593, an Act of Parliament was passed, declaring the Abbacy of Dunfermline perpetually annexed to the Crown ; and another, ratifying the gift of it made to the Queen for her life in morowring-gift at Upslo 24th November 1589. In 1612, Parliament ratified an infestment by the Sovereign, of date 7th March 1593, on the resignation of "Henry Pitcarne of that ilk, as commendator," to the Queen and her heirs, with all infestments granted by her.⁵

A meagre list like that now furnished, of the Superiors of a single religious house, will, it is feared, to most readers, seem equally tedious and useless. It will be acceptable to the few who have groped their way through the obscurer periods of Scotch history, without the guides and landmarks which are furnished for such study in other civilised countries ; and it will be even more valued by the explorer of the local antiquities of the district, who, in the confusion of a pedigree or progress,

He seems to have been alive for several years after the date here assigned. He granted charters, or at least his name is inserted in charters so late as 1564. (6 November 1564. Vol. II. of Registr. Alien. fol. 45.) A tack of the office of baily of the Regality of Dunfermline, in favour of David Dury of that ilk, runs in the following style :—"George be the grace of God commendatar of the abbey of Dumferlnyng, and has often longed for something to fix the era of undated charters or events recorded only in connexion with the Abbot of the day.¹

Like the other great monasteries of Scotland, Dunfermlin acquired the great mass of its property at a very early period of its history; and the acquisition of a considerable portion may be ascribed to the period immediately succeeding the restoration of Malcolm III., when the national convulsion, and the defeat of the other great party, placed in the power of the Crown a great quantity of disposable property.² In these possessions, as well as in those heaped on the Abbey by David I. and his successors, so far as they consisted in landed estates, it would appear that other parties soon acquired a quasi title of possession under the Church. Long before feu-charters were granted, and probably without the solemnity of any written titles, we find families holding extensive lands hereditarily under the Abbot, and vindicating in them some right of property. When disputes occurred, the Abbot, who had not only the keeping but the framing of his own record, had, of course, the better; or if in any instances he was unsuccessful, such events were not likely to find a place in this Register.

The palpable temptation to deceit in framing their Register, and the opportunity for it enjoyed by the only reading and writing class of the community, lead us to examine somewhat critically, the records by which a great house like Dunfermlin held its possessions. But this is really a more serious enquiry to a Scotchman. We have here a great Register professing to record, in an unbroken series, Papal privileges, Royal charters, and the deeds of Nobles and Princes, from the beginning of the 12th century down to the Reformation, and reaching back, at least in early narrative, to transactions of the 11th century. Of the early part of that period, no other contemporary records exist, except such grants and deeds as compose this Register. Therefore, upon their authority ultimately—by the style of these writs—by the incidental information afforded by them—by the absence of all reference to customs.

¹ It must appear strange to the charter scholar, how historical antiquities could be studied at all, before the industrious Keith published his lists of Bishops, and Crawford his imperfect Officers of State. But a Superior of one of the greater monasteries is almost as frequent a witness as a Bishop; and yet nothing has been done to collect the chronological aids from this source. Each mariner here must construct his almanacks and tables for himself. The foundation of the above list of the Abbots of Dunfermlin, was laid by a gentleman, who, in his zealous study of Scotch antiquities and history, still directed his attention most earnestly towards the local history and early statistics of his native county of Perth, and who was fully aware of the importance of the monastic records in pursuing that study. Among deeper causes of regret for his untimely death, a friend and fellow labourer may be allowed to deplore that his taste and industry should have left so few memorials:—

Flere et meminisse relictum est.

² The charters of David I., show that, of the lands confirmed by him, the greater part flowed from the grants of his father and brothers.

laws, and institutions, which must have been mentioned if they existed—must be settled some of those great questions of history and constitutional law, and even of national independence, which have been so long and warmly discussed in this country.

The Ancient Register of Dunfermline has long been preserved in the Advocates Library at Edinburgh.¹ Though recently bound, it is otherwise in precisely the same state as when it formed the subject of the research and labour of the first Earl of Haddington,² more than two centuries ago. That careful antiquary has left among his collections³ a minute description of this Register, a table of its contents, both of which have been used for the present work,⁴ and a great body of extracts intended to throw light on the ancient tenures and forms of conveyancing of Scotland.

Like all Registers of this kind, the MS. is of very different ages. In truth, the ancient Record has served as a nucleus, round which have been gathered the successive deeds of the Monastery. In a few instances, deeds of later date have been interpolated on blank pages among the more ancient writs; but these are easily distinguishable by the form of writing as well as the substance. Without at present noticing these farther, we may speak of what Haddington calls “The Auld Registre,” as of a methodical compilation, and though not always placed contiguously, forming a definite portion of the volume.

It is arranged under heads;—Charters of the Kings from David to Alex. III.;⁵ the Bishops of Saint Andrews⁶ and Dunkeld;⁷ the Chapter of St. Andrews;⁸ the Earls of Fife⁹ and Athol;¹⁰ Countesses Ada and Ela;¹¹ Charters of Laymen;¹² Covenants and conventions regarding disputed territories;¹³ and Bulls of Popes.¹⁴ The hand writing of the greater part of the Record now described, may be ascribed, without much doubt, to the reign of Alexander II. or the early half of the 13th century.

¹ It was in that Library in the time of Bishop Nicholson (Histor. Libr.) and Dalrymple, at the end of the 17th century.

² Mr. Robertson, in his useful “index of charters,” while describing a volume of Haddington’s collections, mentions a part, entitled, “Catalogue Minut of the Register of Dunfermeling,” and adds, “of the fate of the books to which this part of the volume relates, the editor is ignorant. Many particulars contained in it seem worthy the attention of an antiquary.”—Postscript, p. xlviij. While the worthy gentleman was writing his note, he must have been in the very room, and handling volumes from the very press, if not the same shelf, which contained the principal of “the books to which this part of the volume relates,” and the one containing all the “particulars” Mr. Robertson thought worthy of attention.

As far as that reign, the leading part—the record of Royal Charters—is uniform, and apparently the work of one scribe. With the reign of Alexander III. begins a different hand and far less careful form of registering. There is no longer the methodical classification of deeds, nor the rubricated titles and ornamented initial letters. We find few deeds of the period of the troubles that followed the death of Alexander III.; and if it may be allowed to conjecture, there was probably no registering during that disturbed time. When order was restored under Robert, the Record has been again brought into use, and the entries of deeds of that period and subsequently, appear to have been made soon after the date of each writ;—not, however, in any regular classification, and mixed frequently with others of a much more ancient date, registered at the same time and in the same hand, undisguisedly.

It will be observed, the Chartulary goes no farther back than the remodelling of the Monastery by David I. The earlier part, which alone is likely to be called in question, must have been written in the time of his great-grandson, if not even sooner; and it happens singularly that the leading Charter of each reign so fits into that of the preceding, that a fraud is rendered impossible, unless we suppose it perpetrated by the Sovereign or his Chancellor.

Our Register does not lose in authority by an omission which must now be mentioned. In the second volume of the Monasticon, Dugdale has printed a deed purporting to be the foundation charter of Dunfermline by Malcolm III., on the authority of Sir James Balfour, who then stood high in estimation. We have been able to trace this to the copy in Balfour's own hand;¹ but nowhere is any indication given of the source from which he copied it. He uses indeed the phrase, concordat cum autographo; but that must not go far with those who know the “Lyone.” His inaccuracy, for one at all addicted to historical investigation, is beyond all example. The Charter, however, has been received and copied by succeeding antiquaries,² who have endeavoured to reconcile it with history with indifferent success.

great work; and it was presented by Miss Fairfax of Streton to Bishop Keith in 1754, who at his death bequeathed it to the Library.

² Father Hay, dipl. col. I., MS. Adv. Libr. 34, 1, 19. Dalrymple, col., p. 220. Ruddiman in prefat. ad diplom. Scot., &c. Dalrymple hints that this charter “would have more credit if Sir James had told where he had it, or if it was to be found in the Register.” But none of these critics ventures to challenge it as a forgery. It was not popular in Scotland to dispute any proof of national antiquity.

Sir J. Dalrymple “ would rather take it to be a charter by King Malcolm IV.;” but as it pretends to be the foundation charter, and to grant the very lands which subsequent confirmations declare to have been given to the Abbey by Malcolm and Margaret, it must be of Cammore or a forgery.¹ It is hard for a Scotchman to be driven from the oldest Scotch writ. But in these sceptical times this charter can scarcely be sustained; and with it falls all proof of written title or of writing being used in Scotland in the reign of Malcolm III.

The Register of Dunfermlie stands on a better foundation; and indeed no record is throughout freer from suspicion. The antiquity of the handwriting, and regularity of its early part, are certainly calculated to give it great authority. But it is not wanting in other supports. In the volume of original Bulls collected by Sir James Balfour,² of four granted to our Monastery, three are found recorded in our Register, of which one is the first in order as in date of the Roman Bulls.³ In like manner, the volume of Original Charters⁴ collected by Balfour, has preserved the originals of three charters⁵ recorded; and the minute correspondence of the record with the original writs, in all those cases, furnishes a satisfactory criterion of the easy tests of genuineness. Then, without dwelling on Ivo the Culdee Abbot, and Earls M'Duff and Duncan, names, which might be guessed at any ante-record period of Scotch history, we have an Earl Araldus, who is not known ever to have existed, and a person of the peculiar name of Nes son of William, of whom we know nothing in Cammore's time, while a Nes son of William is a frequent witness about a century later. Could the writer of the charter have adopted the name carelessly from a charter of Malcolm IV., which he may have mistaken for one of Cammore?

¹ It is printed exactly from Balfour's MS. in the Appendix, N. 595. Without entering into a discussion regarding the authenticity of this apocryphal deed, one or two points may be indicated which render it at least most suspicious. The original has never been seen. It is not mentioned in the Register. The style of Bisitennus, though adopted in a seal of a succeeding king, is a Saxon affectation, not likely to have occurred to Malcolm Cammore, and very likely to have been invented by some Scotch defender of the independence, when that came into dispute. The Earls and Barons are too ostentatiously put forward, at a time when it may be doubted if their respective ranks were quite ascertained or named. The acquiescence of the people must be spoken of hereafter. If this is a forgery, the phrase has of course been copied from the charters of David and his successors. The punning translation, nons infirmorum, of the Celtic descriptive appellation of Dunfermline is like the trick of a more artificial age. All the lands derived from Malcolm are here; while it would seem, from the terms of David's confirmations, Fothrif came by a separate gift, whether written or oral. There is reason to suspect that Muselburgh was not a name in the days of Cammore, though the place was conveyed by the name of Inueresk. The witnesses are remarkable. The deed bears to be testimonia Episcoporum, &c.; and in subsequent early charters the Bishops seem alone to have affixed their cross of subscription. But here there is not one Bishop. It might be dangerous to give names that would afford

³ These originals are printed verbatim in the Appendix. It will be observed that N. 597 corresponds with N. 236, N. 599 with N. 276, and N. 600 with N. 280.

⁵ N. 596 of the Appendix is the original of N. 94, N. 598, of N. 125, and N. 603, of N. 298. The charter of the Church of Kinross by Bishop Lamberton, printed from the original, Appendix, N. 604, is not to be found in the Register. It probably supplies one of three charters regarding Kinross, which occupied the 94th leaf when the “Tabill” was prefixed, which leaf —injuria ejusdam scisoris— as Macfarlan's copyist has it, is now wanting. This charter of the Bishop is evidently the conclusion of the transaction recorded in N. 351. It has been cut out before the time of Lord Haddington.

faithfulness and accuracy of the framers of the Register. When we add to this the unusual linking on, of the great charters of the successive kings after David I., each confirming the very terms of his predecessor's grant; and the historical fact, that under these charters, the Abbey possessed its vast estates for many centuries, and down to a period quite within the reach of history—it seems really that no record of any antiquity is established by a greater body of intrinsic and extrinsic evidence.

It is not of mere wantonness that these proofs of the authenticity of this Register are arrayed, but chiefly from the importance that has been attached to the style in which the leading charters of David I. and his successors run. “In nomine sancte et individue trinitatis, Ego David Dei gratia Rex Scotorum, auctoritate regia ac potestate : Episcoporum, Comitum Baronumque regni mei confirmatione et testimonio : Clero etiam adquiescente et Populo :”—these are very formal terms of sanction, and to a mind predisposed to admit the theory, readily take the shape of a solemn legislative enactment, by the authority of the King's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons in Parliament assembled.¹ So reasonable did the inference appear, and yet so adverse to the sound view of the introduction of our parliamentary constitution, that later enquirers have solved the difficulty by denying the authority of the charters founded on. The palpable objections to the pretended foundation charter of Malcolm have been extended to the whole; and the most authentic and venerable of our Scotch records has been brought into question. After all, it is a mere delusion. There is no mention of parliament or general council in these charters; no assertion of the “parliamentary powers of the people”; no way has been devised in which they could yet express their consent as one of the three estates. If it be regarded without prepossession, the preamble of these writs only sets forth in affected and monkish magniloquence, that the Royal munificence was bestowed with the general approbation of the country. If the evidence were much more in point, it is dangerous to build theories of constitution on a single writ; but, unwarmed by the rashness of their predecessors, we have the same error committed even in the present day, and by historical antiquaries of more research and much higher name than the speculator who, out of an apocryphal charter, constructed a perfect Scotch Parliament in the reign of Malcolm Canmore.²

¹ Dr. Gilbert Stuart, it is believed, was the first to build his constitutional theory upon the authority of the charters of Dunfermline, and he was unlucky enough to pitch on the apocryphal charter of Malcolm III., while those of David might have served for his argument. Observations on the Public Law of Scotland, p. 128, 329, 361. Well might the author adopt this motto—

“*Incedo per ignes
Suppositus cineri doloso.*”

² It is one advantage that may reasonably be hoped

It is necessary briefly to explain the arrangement of the present volume.—The first 189 pages contain what may be most correctly styled the Ancient Register, begun probably early in Alexander II.'s reign, and brought down nearly to the end of that of his son. Following the arrangement of the original, it is divided under the heads of the different classes of grantors. In the class of Crown grants,¹ the only liberty used is in placing the great confirmatory charter of each reign at its commencement, which is not always the case in the Record, though it does not pretend to place them chronologically. The charters of the Bishops² have been only so far altered in arrangement as to place the successive Bishops in right order of succession. In the section of charters of laymen,³ the order of the original has been adhered to; but the bulls of the Popes,⁴ where ascertainable with certainty, have been occasionally altered in position to suit chronology.

The remainder of the Register,⁵ including charters interpolated on the leaves of the most ancient part, has been arranged, not with reference to the supposed period of registration, but in conformity with the actual or conjectural date of the various instruments. Those of lowest dates, least importance, and greatest bulk, have been abridged at the end.⁶ It has been endeavoured to preserve in every case the exact operative terms of the original, and all clauses and even expressions unusual or otherwise interesting, as well as the names of the witnesses, where these were other than the members of the convent.

In every book of register like the present, are found writs undated, and evidently designed as styles. These have been collected, and are here placed at the conclusion of the Abbreviates;⁷ and lastly, nine entries, omitted in arranging the work for the press, are subjoined.⁸

The only remaining matter of the volume, known under the name of the Charters of Dunfermline, is a “tabill” of some antiquity, referring to the contents of the volume before its more recent additions at the beginning and end. This has

from the publication of a great body of Scotch diplomacy, that antiquaries shall no longer be at liberty to frame ancient constitutions for Scotland, to suit their reading of an insulated writ. Among several thousands of royal grants and records of transactions with the Crown, from the time of Alexander I. down to Robert Bruce, if we find no other allusion to the three estates, or to the representation of the commons in parliament, we must adopt an interpretation of these Dunfermline charters, which shall be consistent with that state of the evidence. Is it conceivable, that in the same mass of authentic documents, no allusion should be found to a court of paramount authority, like the curia supremum Scottie—if such a court ever existed? See Documents and records illustrating the history of Scotland, edited by Sir F. Palgrave, 1827.

been prefixed to the present work, and with the help of tables of the Earl of Haddington, applicable to the more modern matter, has been made to serve the purpose both of a reference to the original, and a table of the contents of the printed volume.

The contents of the first Appendix, consisting of the Apocryphal charter of Malcolm III,¹ and of nine bulls and charters,² printed from the originals in the Advocates' Library, have been already referred to.

The Second Appendix, the Rental of the Abbey, as taken up in 1561 and successive years, under the Act appropriating the thirds of benefices to the ministers of religion and to the Crown, is printed from a volume of Lord Haddington's Collections in the same Library.³

The Third Appendix gives the contents of five volumes of feu-rights and other charters and leases granted by the successive Abbots or Commandators of Dunfermline, of the property belonging to, or held under their House; and by Queen Anne of Denmark, "Ladie of Dunfermelyn." The first of these⁴ is now in the possession of the Marquess of Tweeddale, the heritable Baillie of the Regality of Dunfermline. On its first leaf it bears the following inscription;—No cum rentale seu registrum terrarum ad Regalitatem de Dunfermling spectantium anno millesimo quingentesimo quinquagesimo quinto per dominum Joannem monachum professum ejusdem de mandato Reverendi [eiri] Georgii Durie commendatarii [dicti] monasterii . I . Henrisone chartarius, notarius publicus. The inventory of its contents is from Haddington's Collections,⁵ collated with the original volume. The second volume⁶ is not now known to exist. The inventory of its contents is copied from Lord Haddington. The third,⁷ of which the contents are also described from Lord Haddington's inventory, is now in the General Register House, and it has been collated for this work. The inventories of the contents of the fourth volume,⁸ which is in the possession of the Marquess of Tweeddale, and of the fifth,⁹ which is preserved in the Advocates Library, are not contained in Lord Haddington's collections, but have been made up from the originals.

As a body of ancient statistical and local information, it is hoped this volume may be found even richer than any of the former published chartularies. These records are gradually extending over Scotland a net-work of local and charter history, which will save us in future from ignorant guessers, and lay a foundation for that which the civilization of the country demands,—a history of the early settlement and transmission of land in each district. Such an object might be well joined to the study of Family history. It is of infinitely greater utility, and there is no reason why somewhat of the same interest that is felt in a long-descended pedigree of a noble name, should not attach to a well proved descent of lands.

To trace the history of the buildings of the united Church, Monastery, and Palace of Dunfermlin, would exceed the bounds of a prefatory notice, and could not be satisfactory or intelligible without aid from drawings. The original Church of Canmore, perhaps not of stone, must have been replaced by a new edifice when it was dedicated in the reign of David I.¹ If any part of that structure remain, it must be little more than the foundations. Age, or the accidents of a rough time, or the increasing consequence of the House, gave rise to an enlarged and more magnificent structure² about the middle of the 13th century. The translation of the Saintly foundress was probably arranged to give solemnity to the opening of the New Church. Soon after that, Dunfermlin is described by one who was probably an eye-witness of what he tells,³ as of vast extent, inclosing three plough-lands within its preeinets, and containing palaces of such magnificence, that three kings, with their trains, might be accommodated in it at once without inconvenience. This sumptuous pile was destroyed and levelled with the ground, by the soldiers of Edward in 1303, excepting only the Church and a few dwellings for the monks.

The accounts of the Great Chamberlains give us some notices of the expensive funerals and tomb of Robert Bruce at Dunfermlin. So entirely had the Hero's tomb disappeared, that its situation was lately discovered rather by accident than historical deduction. Even local tradition afforded no assistance.

On the 28th March, 1561, the Lords of the Congregation “ past to Stirling, and be the way kest down the Abbey of Dunfermling.”⁴

The Nave of the Church of the thirteenth century remains pretty entire—a valuable specimen of the architecture of that age. The Choir has been taken away and replaced by a modern Church. The tombs and remains of the Kings and Saints which lie crowded round that old High Altar, are now unknown and dishonoured.

² Ecclesia per nobilioris structure fabricum fuerit augmentata. From the Bulls of the 7th year of Innocent IV. (1250,) we may conjecture that a dispute took place between the Bishop and the Abbot, respecting the amount of the dues for dedicating the Church. The Abbot obtained from the Pope first an exemption from all but the usual procurations, due at all Episcopal visitations. And only two days later, His Holiness dispensed altogether with consecration of the Church of new, in respect that the walls of the former Church still remained. N. 288.

Even the grave of Robert the Bruce, which was lately opened, is not distinguished in any way, except that it is said to lie below a vulgar modern pulpit.

Of the Cloisters nothing remains. The oldest remaining part of the Palace is not of higher antiquity (unless perhaps the mere foundations) than the 15th century. The greater part of the picturesque ruins is more modern. The Palace must have been still habitable on the 19th of November 1600, when Charles I. was born there.

It was fit that after five centuries, the last princely descendant to be born in Scotland of the marriage of Malcolm and Saint Margaret, who was to bear to the Anglo-Saxon throne, the blood of the Confessor, and the misfortunes of all his race, should first see the light within the old walls of Danfermline.
